CREATING PLACES TO BELONG IN EDUCATION

Creating a place where students, faculty, and staff feel like they belong is more than providing study spaces, cafés, or administrative offices. It’s about connecting to a greater purpose and supporting individual needs. It’s about balancing hybrid environments, prioritizing flexibility, supporting inclusion and belonging, and focusing on overall health and well-being. Together, let’s explore your objectives and develop flexible solutions that support unique learning styles and inspiring education environments.

Through research, insights, conversations with customers, and even a reflection on our own journey around what it takes to create an environment of belonging, we have developed our point of view on Creating Places to Belong. We believe that designing products and applications to support these four elements within education facilities can improve the experience for all.

Prioritizing Flexibility

To accommodate a variety of learners and learning types, education spaces must be able to change and adapt – including options for mobility and storage.

Balancing Hybrid Environments

Whether attending class in-person or virtually, students and faculty need to feel comfortable in their environments to be successful.

Supporting Inclusion and Belonging

When students have a sense of belonging, they are more engaged with their studies and their community, which ultimately allows them to excel in academics.

Focusing on Health and Well-being

Mitigate burnout and retain students and faculty by providing on-site spaces where they can go to ground themselves, take a few deep breaths, or restore calm after a stressful encounter.

73% of students said they missed the 'friends and social life' part of the physical campus experience.
